Challenges

Many employees were forced into remote work during the COVID-19 pandemic, while others took on a hybrid or work-from-anywhere model. This shift in workplace flexibility brought several benefits but has also introduced many new challenges. Communication becomes paramount in hybrid workplaces where employees are physically present in different locations. Collaboration is another hurdle managers must address to ensure team members work together effectively. Hybrid workers rely heavily on technology, creating supply challenges to do their jobs effectively. Employee engagement is another challenge, especially if they are not physically present. Managers also need ways to track performance and provide feedback, even if they are not physically present with their employees.

How 22Miles Solves Them

Remove the limits of your connectivity possibilities. 22Miles seamlessly incorporates essential information, such as emergency alerts, news, stats, events, and other vital data feeds, into a single management system. These feeds will update dynamically, enabling owners to get more done with less work. The software tools and workplace integrations empower employees to locate, view, and reserve conference, huddle, or meeting rooms with automatic updates. And it seamlessly operates using the software your team already uses and loves, such as Microsoft Office 365, Teams, Cisco WebEx, Zoom, and more.

Adding widgets, quick-edit settings, and visual filters from the back-end provides visiting guests real-time property information. The editing portal was designed for straightforward and quick management without requiring specialized programming or coding training. Operators can insert any data listings with automation, property management systems, or manual tenant directory designs for any display, including touch-enabled screens.
